

The Life Of Cheong Wing

It is biography of a prominent philanthropist in Singapore. Born to a poor family, Cheong Wing was kicked out of school because he couldn't afford the fees. He took one job after another. On his own he learned to read and write Chinese. Civil war in China prompted his family to move to Macau, where he became a salesman for a herbal/ drug firm, and saved enough to start his own business when he came to Singapore. He learned English from the author's sister Ivy, and acquired Singapore citizenship. He took up golf as a form of exercise and from there he made his business contacts. As his own pharmaceutical business prospered, he donated generously to help the less fortunate and encouraged others to do likewise. He was very involved in clan associations, grassroots organisations, charitable and civic bodies such as Kwong Wai Shiu Hospital and the National Kidney Foundation. He was also active in promoting education and the arts. Cheong Wing was awarded two National Day awards, and appointed a Justice of Peace. He was recognised by the Queen for his work in the St John Ambulance Brigade. For a decade he battled with brain tumour. In between operations he cheerfully continued his routine work, played golf and his charity work and community services. He died in March 2003 at 81, leaving his mark as a man with a Golden Heart..
