

The New Quotable Einstein

For the first time in paperback, here is a newly expanded edition of the best-selling book that was hailed as setting a new standard for quotation books. Tens of thousands of readers have enjoyed The Quotable Einstein and The Expanded Quotable Einstein, with translations into twenty-two languages. This updated edition--which appears on the 100th anniversary of Einstein's Special Theory of Relativity and the 50th anniversary of Einstein's death--offers more than 300 new quotations, or over 1,200 altogether. Nearly all are by Einstein himself and a few are about the self-professed lone wolf Time magazine named Man of the Century at the turn of the millennium.

The New Quotable Einstein also includes a new section, On Aging, and fresh material has been added to the appendix--from a touching account by Helen Dukas of Einstein's last days to a day-by-day summary of Johanna Fantovas telephone conversations with Einstein during the final year and a half of his life. Also included are a poem called Einstein, by Robert Service; and three virtually unknown verses to the song As Time Goes By (made famous in the movie Casablanca) that refer to Einstein. New photographs have been selected to introduce each section of the book.

Through well-documented quotations and supplementary information, The New Quotable Einstein provides a bigger and better biographical account of this multifaceted man--as son, husband, father, lover, scientist, philosopher, aging widower, humanitarian, and friend. It shows us even more vividly why the real and imagined Einstein continues to fascinate people across the world into the twenty-first century.

300-plus new quotations, more than 1,200 in all. A day-by-day summary of Johanna Fantovas phone conversations with Einstein toward the end of his life. A touching account of Einstein's last days. A new section, On
